

SEPTEMBER 16, 1968

ramming

put on the air. And that's as it should be.

Keep writing!!

THE U.S. COURT of Appeals recently ruled that broadcast stations which criticize individuals in publicly aired editorials are not required to grant time to the subjects of the criticism to reply.

The court overturned the FCC's personal attack rule, which guarantees to subjects of editorial attack a reasonable opportunity to respond over the air within a reasonable period of time.

The court also struck down an FCC ruling that stations which endorse political candidates must give an opportunity to respond.